Ann Landers

Dear Ann Landers: Please pass this word on to "Dim Hopes," the poor kid who was getting headaches trying to study in the kitchen under a 60 watt bulb. At today's average rate of 3 cents a kilowatt hour, the added cost of burning a 100-watt bulb over that of a 60-watt would be about 1/8 of a cent per hour, or 80 hours for the price of a candy bar. This is hardly worth making a fuss about.

And I'll bet that 60 watt bulb is in a ceiling fixture when it ought to be in a portable lamp beside her bed or on her desk. This means she is getting at the reading level only 1/30 or 1/40 the amount of light out of the bulb. If it were properly placed she'd have no problem.—A.M.P. LIGHTING SPECIALIST FOR G. E.

Dear A.M.P.: Thanks for your explanation. I received many letters from lighting specialists (some called themselves "engineers" but yours was the easiest to understand. I hope this will help the young lady to see the light.

Confidential to BORED STIFF: I know the type—one ear and two mouths. Your only out is to make a "previous engagement" immediately.

Confidential to THE WRECK OF THE HESPERUS: If you want to cry over split milk, Madam, please condense it. Fifty-three typewritten pages is an enormous amount of reading. Please try again and so will I. I want very much to help you.
